

At Glensaugh we recently hosted a Safety and Health Awareness Day for the Health and Safety Executive. The purpose of the event was to raise awareness within the farming community of the many issues which affect the health of farmers and their families, for example tractor safety, animal handling, working at height and manual handling. The "message" was well received and the day was a success for all concerned; for the Institute it was a good profile raising exercise as we had around 200 people through our doors. Thanks to the Glensaugh staff who all helped to set up the venue and also assisted with logistics on the day.

As ever we are strongly focussed on our capital projects, of which a brief resume. The woodland area has now been taken over by our planting contractors who are carrying out ground preparation. Our public access trail design work is all but complete and is about to go to press. The wind turbine contractors have been for a site visit but have not yet turned up with their diggers. Glensaugh Lodge is presently being gutted and the biomass boiler project is moving through the grant system.
